In September 1961, a group of men from the County Road B and Dale Street neighborhoods formed an organization to help promote youth activities throughout the Roseville area. They built a warming house and installed lights for the skaters at nearby Alameda Pond. They planted trees, held dances and bought playground equipment for the parks and playgrounds throughout the city. They built a clubhouse for the members and a softball field complete with dugouts, fences and a scoreboard. They promoted sports through the sponsorship of baseball, hockey, softball, football, volleyball, basketball and soccer teams. They built an outdoor shelter, bocce ball and horseshoe courts. They conducted Halloween and Christmas parties for the kids, and social activities for the physically challenged. It is estimated that in these first 42 years, the B-Dale Club had dedicated over 1.2 million dollars to the youth and seniors of Roseville. The odds of success for an organization like the B-Dale Club would seem slim indeed. It has no affiliation with a larger group. So its membership dues, fundraising events and the rental of its facilities are its only means of support. It is truly a non-profit organization, with money it earns directed toward charitable causes. It works because of its members, men and women alike, who believe in its humanitarian philosophy, and donate their time and talents to make sure it works.
